STATINTL

Our Senators Commended

Ohioans have the right to be proud of their senators, Frank J. Lausche and Stephen M. Young. I refer to their vote opposing the confirmation of John A. McCone as head of the CIA, America's super-secret agency.

The position of the director of CIA has been described as one of the most vital in all of our country. There was something indecent about the haste in confirming an individual who does not appear to have divested himself of a conflict of interests.

It speaks well for our senators that they were diligent in searching out the facts. They were courageous in taking their stand. They did not fear to be in a minority, when conscience and reason dictated their decision.

Somebody has defined the difference between the politician and the statesman. The politician thinks about the next election. The statesman is concerned about the next generation. Our senators have demonstrated statesmanship.
